He hung suspended from a rig composed of a chair attached to a couple of ropes. Around his waist he had taken the precaution to secure another rope. In removing the paint and other material from the tin roof Watson had used acids that had somehow got sprinkled on the ropes. The acid burned through the ropes and without the slightest warning one of them gave way. The crowd yelled, and scarcely had their shouts died away when the other rope, on which such a sudden strain had been imposed, also gave way. The chair tumbled to the street below. Watson dangled from the rope that had been passed around his waist He swung to and fro in the air as he cried to the excited crowd below to help him. He had fallen a few feet un-til the slack of the rope had been paid out, but he preserved his composure. ALUMINUM TO BE CHEAP .- The Patent Office authorities sent to Daluth, a chemical expert on an application for a patent for a new process of obtaining aluminum from its oxide. The process includes chemical combinations heretofore supposed to be impossible, and on this ground the application for a patent was rejected, the method being termed inoperative. Three entirely satisfactory tests were made by the govern-ment chemist, and he has returned to Washington. A copy of his report to the Patent Office has been received at Duluth. After detailing the tests as made by himself he says that the pro-cess is operative, that it appears to be almost perfect in its results in obtaining the entire aluminum value of the oxide.
